This past Tuesday, we celebrated our first “back to school night” at Saint Hilary School, and right after that, we gathered for the very first time with those families and individuals who are interested in becoming Catholics.

That same evening, the priests of the Archdiocese received a letter from Archbishop Salvatore Cordileone, assuring us that his earlier letter of August 31 was not at all a call for Pope Francis to be removed from office, but rather a call for the whole Church of God to come together and work toward making our community safer, more transparent, and a place where the bishops of the world will also be held to strict accountability for their conduct and choices.

I asked our Archbishop for permission to share his message with you, the People of God, and he said, “Amen!” Having just returned from a pastoral visit to Nigeria where he had ordained several new priests, Archbishop Cordileone was horrified to learn that people here, and in many other parts of the world, had interpreted his words about Archbishop Carlo Maria Viganò as meaning that he agreed with Archbishop Viganò’s demand that Pope Francis resign as Supreme Pontiff. The Archbishop of San Francisco told us that the Holy Father is not some CEO of a large corporation, but the father of a family, and that we should work together, as a family of faith, to make our Church and world healthier, safer, and more attentive to keeping children, teens, and adults protected from any form of sexual abuse, harassment, intimidation, or violence.

This means, among other things, that those who are guilty are immediately removed from ministry, and not merely moved to a new place where their names are not (yet) known. It also means that good people from Church life, moms and dads, people with expertise in the areas of investigation and enforcement, must become part of the ongoing process to make sure our vulnerable people are kept safe.

I mention this in the context of our parochial school, our RCIA group, and our Religious Education Program (which starts class this morning), because people today are very aware of the problems, and should be aware of updates like this latest letter from Archbishop Cordileone, in which he makes it clear he is not trying to remove the Pope but rather work with the Holy Father in his efforts to do good.

Archbishop Viganò and Pope Francis come from very different backgrounds. The former comes from a wealthy Italian family, has spent much of his life in the Vatican diplomatic corps, and since 1992 has been the “Titular Bishop of Ulpiana” — which means he has never shepherded an actual diocese. As is typical of such Vatican diplomats, we was named titular bishop of a diocese that does not even exist any longer, an ancient Roman city which now consists of ruins in today’s Kosovo.

Pope Francis does not come from money, but from an immigrant family in Argentina, and he took a vow of poverty when he entered the Jesuits in 1958. In 1998 he became the Archbishop of a real diocese (Buenos Aires) and led the Church in Argentina during very difficult and violent times, dedicating much of his time to ministering to people in the slums who were the victims of oppression. It surprises no one that the two men would disagree about many things, but they are both part of what Archbishop Cordileone so wonderfully described as a “family of faith” under the Holy Father, “and to him we owe our loyalty.”
